Accident & Health

Healthcare industry opportunity at a glance

Approximately 1.6 million people are employed in the healthcare industry in Australia.¹

In 2015-16, 82% of people saw a GP and 32% of people saw a medical specialist in the previous 12 months.¹

The healthcare and social assistance (private) industry in 2014-15 had strong growth across all key data items. Sales and service income grew by 13.8% to $84.2b and industry value added (IVA) grew by 12.8% to $76.7b. This industry has seen strong demand for its products and services from Australia's ageing population in recent years.¹

The healthcare IT market size in 2015 was estimated to be at $1.20 billion. Research undertaken by Frost and Sullivan suggests expected growth at a compound annual rate of 12.3% between 2013 and 2020 in the Australian healthcare IT market.

Healthcare playing an integral role

A significant opportunity

After 25 consecutive years of economic growth, the prosperous Australian population is living longer and demand for healthcare services is growing.

Alongside significant demographic trends, such as the aging population, technological medical advances are continuing apace and a broader health and wellness trend is seeing increased numbers of Australians accessing healthcare services more frequently.

The Australian Trade and Investment Commission has summarised the situation: “Over the past decade, Australia’s health and medical industry has grown dramatically in size and reputation for its world leading technology, innovation, high professional skills, advanced research, development and robust health system.

It is characterised by a small number of global multinational companies (approximately 20 per cent of the industry) and a large number of small and medium-sized enterprises (80 per cent of the industry).

The health and medical industry is represented by manufacturers, specialised in niche applications in the fields of cardiovascular, diagnostic, hearing, orthopaedic, respiratory devices, as well as health IT, health infrastructure, services and clinical trials.

The industry is also expected to advance rapidly into new fields of science, engineering, and nanotechnology to facilitate new innovations in the biomedical sphere and an increasing convergence of physical and biological technology platforms.

The key growth areas are:

- Medical and surgical equipment and devices
- Health IT
- Health infrastructure and services
- Clinical trials.

The domestic Australian natural (complementary) healthcare industry is robust and significant. Market research shows that the popularity of natural healthcare products is increasing with a growth rate of seven per cent year on year. Three-quarters of Australians, including 92 per cent of women aged 20-24; take at least one dietary supplement and a quarter of the population visit complementary healthcare practitioners each year.

The Australian industry continues to grow to meet these requirements. Already attuned to alternative approaches to health, discerning baby boomers (Australia’s largest population group) increasingly demand greater choice and adopt a preventative healthcare approach to maintaining healthier lives. In Australia, the fastest growth areas are nutritional oils, men’s health and eye health.

The Australian natural healthcare industry (which is fully integrated into our national health system), presents a wealth of business opportunities at every level.”
