What is Forefront Portfolio... and why private business needs it

“Why do I need to purchase a Management Liability policy? I am not a public-listed company.”

In the early days of Management Liability the above was a common response by potential Insureds when deciding whether or not to purchase a Management Liability policy. As the product matured over the years, both brokers and their clients became increasingly aware of the breadth of legal, statutory and employee costs that a small, private Australian business could incur. Business failures, workplace accidents, regulatory investigations, employee theft and commercial disputes are just a few ways in which small businesses can incur unanticipated costs that they cannot afford to fund.

Friend or foe?

In today’s litigious environment, no business relationship is free of risk - even small business owners have exposure to multiple stakeholders who could bring action against you and/or your business. All of the below can be deemed friend or foe when it comes to managing a business:

- Employees
- Vendors
- Investors
- Competitors
- Customers
- Government agencies
- Suppliers
- Creditors
- Family members

Most people don’t usually associate these constituents with potential harm to a company or its managers, but any of them could generate litigation - and many could engage in criminal activity that may have a negative financial impact on a company’s bottom line.

The owners of private companies need to consider, “if one of these stakeholders came after me with a legal dispute, am I protected?”
