

95% of businesses
and consumers
would be willing to pay more for insurance, if the value
they get outweighs
the price they pay

Put value first, not price.

We're introducing you to the four key tools of value-added selling, to help you stay a step ahead.
Because at Chubb, our focus is your success.

Introducing Selling in Uncertain Times

Your clients' challenges have changed.
So your challenges have changed.

Rapid digitisation, competition from direct carriers and insurtech players, economic instability and a hardening market – these factors have created an environment where clients have more choice and less desire to spend. To succeed, you need to move beyond conversations about price, and focus on value in all its forms.

To help you do that, we've collaborated with Paul Reilly, sales training specialist and President of Reilly Training, to produce a wide range of materials that will help you discover value-added sales tactics and put them into practice. We've created videos, case studies, an in-depth virtual sales training session and more – explore the resources at www.chubb.com/id-en/partners/selling-in-uncertain-times.html

Reilly Training is a leading research and training firm with nearly four decades of experience specialising in value-added selling tactics and techniques.

Value-added selling is built on four simple concepts

01

Value: Your secret weapon

Value is personal and is defined by the client

02

Seeing from your clients' perspective

Refining your understanding of your clients' needs

03

Presenting with purpose

Presenting a full package, instead of a policy

04

Thinking beyond the sale

Consistently reinforcing the value you provide

Value-added selling: explained

Value: Your secret weapon

Where to start: Ask incisive questions and bring your own experience to the table to better understand what your clients value.

Go further: With the value formula, a proven tool that uses benefits like saving time or gaining peace of mind to balance out price.

Seeing from your clients' perspective

Where to start: Empathy is key to uncovering your clients wants, needs, and concerns. See the world through their lens, to offer the support they need.

Go further: Show your clients that their needs aren't generic with value-adding techniques that reinforce the uniqueness of their challenges — and your solutions.

Presenting with purpose

Where to start: Don't sell your clients a policy. Sell them the big picture, wrapping up everything you've learned about them in a compelling, compassionate pitch.

Go further: Add value to your presentations with analogies that draw connections between what you know your clients care about and the decisions they need to make.

Thinking beyond the sale

Where to start: If you're not treating clients like prospects, someone else will. The value you offer goes well beyond the initial sale — so don't let your clients forget it.

Go further: Value in insurance is heavily tied to making a claim. That may never happen. So stay in touch with reminders of the benefits your work brings.
